Dear Friends,

It is our pleasure to present the Third Edition of the Indigenous Peoples Funding and Resource Guide.

In this edition, we continue to grow by producing a more complete and concise guide, expanding into broader grant curriculum that includes how to write a proposal, an expanded glossary section, and an expanded list of potential foundations. We have also included a section of the “Four R” Principles on authentic Indigenous giving: Reciprocity, Respect, Relationship and Responsibility. The rebranding is IFIP’s way increase its commitment to the Indigenous peoples of the World as the stewards of our precious Mother Earth.

For many funders, Indigenous Peoples are exotic and their projects far removed from their typical grantee portfolios. Current direct grant-making is very low, in 2006, out of the 4.5 billion (from US foundations) given to international causes only .003 % was earmarked for Indigenous causes and concerns. This is a dire situation, and we hope this guide will encourage more direct funding to Indigenous communities.

Our focus on establishing real partnerships with Indigenous Peoples is shared by many in the philanthropic community. The Global Philanthropy Leadership Meeting in Rome in 2010 stated their agreement to ground philanthropy in reality and align its vision to that of those on the outside. Indigenous peoples are part of those who are outside. They are the largest minority in the world with more than 370 million people in over 90 different countries. In every case, Indigenous populations are the most impoverished and underrepresented group within their respective country. For Indigenous peoples to stop being on the outside, if they are ever going to come inside, they need direct resources. This Guide encompasses new strategies foundations can use to improve grant-making relationships with Indigenous peoples.

We hope this Guide enables Indigenous grant-seekers to gain the funds needed to build the capacity of their communities and grant-makers to gain important insight into how their portfolios can fund more Indigenous causes and concerns.

Respectfully,

Ken Wilson
Chair of the Board, International Funders for Indigenous Peoples (IFIP)

• What’s in the Guide:
For grant-seekers the Guide provides:

- A Grant-Makers Directory organized by project and funding region categories
- Prospective Funders Worksheet
- Researching Foundations and Funders information and websites
- Glossary of Foundation and Grant Terms, Types and Concepts
- Contact information for networking opportunities and resources.

For grant-makers the Guide offers:

- Ways to develop a more diverse funding portfolio
- UN Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues /Indigenous Voices Fact Sheet: Who are Indigenous Peoples?
- The Four Rs of Authentic Indigenous Giving Principles

*This updated publication would not have been possible without the financial support of: Arntz Foundation, Ford Foundation, Garfield Foundation, and The Christensen Fund

IFIP would like to thank: Sam Moskwa of the Australian Grant-makers Service, Ramona Cornell and Tami Snyder for their work in updating the Guide.

The International Funders for Indigenous Peoples (IFIP), a United States-based affinity group, was born from the needs voiced by grantmakers to more effectively manage their efforts to support Indigenous development.

IFIP is an association of grantmakers supporting Indigenous projects worldwide. It provides a forum for funders to exchange ideas and experiences, as well as to interact with representatives of Indigenous communities to get direct information for grantmaking.

IFIP’s goal is to foster greater foundation commitment and more effective grantmaking for Indigenous peoples by improving networking opportunities, enhancing collaboration, building capacity, and promoting linkages among new and experienced donors.

IFIP and its members work to:

- Increase knowledge and understanding of the unique issues related to funding projects for Indigenous peoples, especially focusing on critical data for programs.
- Encourage innovation by grantmakers by helping them to network, exchange practical ideas, and share tools that work.
- Create a better cross-disciplinary understanding of Indigenous peoples and the holistic contexts in which they live and work.

Advocacy constitutes a very important and on-going aspect of our work. IFIP will continue to build skills for Indigenous philanthropy through workshops, The Sharing Circle bi-annual newsletter, research reports, annual conferences and regular communications.

Introduction

This Guide is designed to provide information for each step of the grant process. You will find instructions on how to research foundations and how to create winning proposals once you have found a match. We have created an expanded glossary of terms and definitions, and added more funding foundations and their websites.

The directory section outlines 250 philanthropic institutions, foundations, corporations, and government agencies that provide funding for Indigenous communities and other groups working in international development.

Inside you will find:

1. Finding the Foundation and Researching Foundations

   --Includes contact information and websites of foundations and organizations that provide information on current funding opportunities

2. Creating A Proposal And Suggestions For The Successful Delivery Of Projects

   --Step-by-step instruction on how to create a successful grant proposal and a Prospective Funders Worksheet for organizing and tracking foundation research and proposal submission

3. Foundations Directory Lists

   - Foundation and Corporate Grantmakers Funding Indigenous Peoples contains funding organizations that directly fund Indigenous organizations and projects worldwide.
   - International Foundation and Corporate Grantmakers includes philanthropic institutions that fund various countries and regions of the world.
Respect, Relationships, Responsibility and Reciprocity

Key values of Indigenous communities and Native Americans in Philanthropy include Respect, Relationships, Responsibility, and Reciprocity. These guiding values can provide a framework for dialogue to deepen our understanding of the challenges and opportunities involved in making philanthropy truly diverse. Philanthropy’s objectives are to have impact and social benefit that are inherently inclusive of our environment and sovereign nations. If these key foundational values are not incorporated into our practices, we will not experience progress toward our goals. Rather than gaining strength derived from weaving the richness of perspectives, cultures, and visions, we will continue to experience divisiveness, alienation, and the perpetuation of inequity.

“Context Is Everything: Stories And Discussion Of How To Strengthen Partnerships Between The Philanthropic Community And Native Americans,” by Wilma Mankiller notes that the “key to understanding Native American concerns starts with the idea of building a respectful relationship over time.” Respect—an action deeper than tolerance—and relationships, are imperative to achieve diversity in philanthropy and to engage with different perspectives, cultures, and systems.

Our communities and nations have changed in reaction to and as a result of governmental policies, environmental impacts, and economic access, as well as broader social shifts. Our history, our culture, and our values-based framework give us a unique lens to contribute to the discussion. Indigenous peoples offer the gift of perspective. These cultural values give us a unique perspective about the negative effects of discrimination, as well as the impacts of supporting, building, and retaining cultural integrity, language, place, self-determined efforts, and strategic partnerships. These values inform the context for understanding diversity and seeking positive solutions.

Recently, Alaska Native nonprofits and environmentally-focused foundations came together to build respectful relationships and gain deeper understanding. Foundations committed to making a real impact in Alaska recognized the importance of having Indigenous voices and values at the table. This was realized through a multi-pronged approach: Alaska Native representation on foundation boards; Native staff; non-Native allies; community representation in dialogue and sharing meals together.

Native peoples, grounded in their values, history, and vision of the future, are increasingly engaging in profound, innovative, and effective philanthropic practices. Diversity in philanthropy can result in long-term systemic change. Each of us has lessons to learn and to share that inspire profound acts of reciprocity.

For Native peoples, the guiding value of reciprocity is responsibility to give back continuously. Seen through an Indigenous lens, why is diversity in grantmaking and philanthropy important? Indigenous people seek to be in relationship with systems of philanthropy so that all may benefit. Diversity offers opportunities to expand our analysis, strengthen relationships, and discover strategies and actions built upon mutual respect and responsibility for each other and the earth.
UN Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues
Indigenous Peoples/Indigenous Voices
Fact Sheet

Who Are Indigenous Peoples?

It is estimated that there are more than 370 million Indigenous peoples spread across 70 countries worldwide. Practicing unique traditions, they retain social, cultural, economic, and political characteristics that are distinct from those of the dominant societies in which they live. Spread across the world from the Arctic to the South Pacific, they are the descendants - according to a common definition - of those who inhabited a country or a geographical region before people of different cultures or ethnic origins arrived. The new arrivals later became dominant through conquest, occupation, settlement or other means.

Understanding the term “Indigenous”

Considering the diversity of Indigenous Peoples, an official definition of “Indigenous” has not been adopted by any UN-system body. Instead the system has developed a modern understanding of this term based on the following:

- Self-identification as Indigenous Peoples at the individual level and accepted by the community as their Member.
- Historical continuity with pre-colonial and/or pre-settler societies.
- Strong link to territories and surrounding natural resources.
- Distinct social, economic or political systems.
- Distinct language, culture and beliefs.
- Form non-dominant groups of society.
- Resolve to maintain and reproduce their ancestral environments and systems as distinctive peoples and communities.

A Question Of Identity

- According to the UN the most fruitful approach is to identify, rather than define Indigenous peoples. This is based on the fundamental criterion of self-identification as underlined in a number of human rights documents.
- The term “Indigenous” has prevailed as a generic term for many years. In some countries, there may be preference for other terms including tribes, first peoples/nations, aboriginals, ethnic groups, adivasi, janajati. Occupational and geographical terms like hunter-gatherers, nomads, peasants, hill people, etc., also exist, and for all practical purposes can be used interchangeably with “Indigenous peoples.”
In many cases, the notion of being termed “Indigenous” has negative connotations, and some people may choose not to reveal or define their origin. Others must respect such choices, while at the same time working against the discrimination of Indigenous peoples.

Culture and Knowledge

Indigenous peoples are the holders of unique languages, knowledge systems and beliefs, and possess invaluable knowledge of practices for the sustainable management of natural resources. They have a special relation to and use of their traditional land. Their ancestral land has a fundamental importance for their collective physical and cultural survival as peoples. Indigenous peoples hold their own diverse concepts of development, based on their traditional values, visions, needs and priorities.

Political Participation

Indigenous peoples often have much in common with other neglected segments of societies, i.e. lack of political representation and participation, economic marginalization and poverty, lack of access to social services and discrimination. Despite their cultural differences, diverse Indigenous peoples share common problems also related to the protection of their rights. They strive for recognition of their identities, their ways of life and their right to traditional lands, territories and natural resources.

Researching Foundations

This section provides:
- Information on how to determine if a foundation matches your project goals.
- Information on how to research websites for current information about funding trends and opportunities.
- A Foundation Research Form.
- An explanation of how foundations operate; a comprehensive list of terms and definitions can be found in the Glossary.

For most nonprofit organizations and NGOs, fundraising is daunting, but it does not have to be. Identify foundations and corporations with similar program interests. Foundations encourage grantseekers to pay close attention to research. This is the homework of successful fundraising.

Successful fundraising is a focused, deliberate effort that improves with time. There are three major research steps:

- Step 1: Create a List of Potential Foundations
- Step 2: Research & Match Your Project with Potential Funders
- Step 3: Refine & Shortlist Researched Foundations
Step One: Create A List of Potential Foundations

Find foundations through local contacts. Begin talks with your local community funders. You should look to grantmakers already funding in your community before investigating foundations on national or international levels. Make sure you research international businesses in your country that may be interested in your project. In addition, check with embassies and consulates to see if there are any international programs in your country that would apply to your community issues.

Compile a comprehensive list of foundations, corporations, and other funders whose interests are the same as your organization. During this research stage, include all funders that you think should be on the list. Those not interested in your programs will be eliminated in later research steps. Other sources of foundation information require either the Internet or a trip to the library. Libraries are great resources, many academic and public libraries have information on foundations. Call the library and ask the librarian about the research resources available.

INTERNET RESOURCES FOR RESEARCHING FOUNDATIONS

In the United States, the best source of online research for grantseekers is the Foundation Center at http://www.foundationcenter.org/

For international research, check out Grantmakers Without Borders at http://www.gwob.net/

According to the Harvard University Global Equity Initiative at the Kennedy School of Government, there are more than 45 regional and country philanthropic support groups. These groups provide a wealth of information, including directories of funders, and are a source of information for grantmakers in their countries. The groups are not grantmakers themselves; they do not accept grant proposals. Their purpose is to help grantseekers find information and resources on grantmakers who match project goals.

A Sampling of Regional And Country Philanthropic Support Groups Includes:

- Asia Pacific Philanthropy Consortium www.asianphilanthropy.org
- Center for Philanthropy and Civil Society (Thailand) http://www.cpcs.nida.ac.th/home/
- Grupo de Fundaciones (Argentina) http://www.gdfe.org.ar/
- Centro Mexicano para la Filantropia (CEMEFI) http://www.cemefi.org/spanish/index.php
- Philanthropy Australia http://www.philanthropyaustralia.org/
- Puerto Rico Community Foundation http://www.fcpr.org/

- Centro Colombiano de Responsabilidad (Colombia) http://www.ccre.org.co/default.asp
- Institute for Development of Social Investment (Brazil) http://www.idis.org.br/
Step 2 – Research & Match Your Project To Potential Foundation Funders

The first place to look for information about a foundation is with the foundation itself. This is the best up-to-date source of information. Annual reports and printed guidelines are the most helpful and can often be found on the internet. Carefully study the foundations you have listed.

Many countries run an agency at the state or provincial level that can assist you in your research endeavors. You may also visit the U.S. Information Service located in the U.S. Embassy, the British Council, or the European Union Representative, and other international embassies and consulates.

BEST RESOURCES FOR FINDING FOUNDATION INFORMATION

The Internet – There are many grant and foundation information sites on the internet. Many foundations post their annual reports on their websites to save printing costs and to ensure the most recent version is available, but if you cannot find an annual report or funding guidelines online, contact the foundation directly and request a copy. We have listed web resources throughout this publication.

Annual Reports – Foundation annual reports are an excellent source of information. These reports provide information on current giving patterns and information for projecting trends. The annual report also reflects the personality, style, and interests of the foundation. Look for clues that reveal the underlying philosophy of the foundation. Examine the list of grantees and look for clues for specific areas of interest. Find and review foundation strategic plans to learn what motivates the foundation. It is important to understand the vision and mission statements of a foundation to ensure project goals are conducive.

Guidelines – The proposal guidelines contain additional information regarding where the foundation funds, as well as deadlines for submitting a proposal. Stated guidelines can tell you quickly whether or not a foundation could fund your project.

Ask these questions when reviewing the information you have found:
• Do you match with mission and vision?
• Are you a priority type of grant, group or geographic area?
• Do the funds they offer match the funding level you need?

If you answer yes to all of these questions, research the foundation further by reviewing the guidelines in the funding opportunities. A good research strategy is talking with previous grantee organizations to learn more about the foundations funding and operating preferences. Create a detailed prospect worksheet for each funder that includes their current information. A sample comprehensive worksheet is provided on the following page.

Step 3 – Refine & Shortlist Researched Foundations

Taking the time to research foundations thoroughly to find the best match for your project is a critical step to successful funding. Compiling a comprehensive list of potential funders allows grantseekers the opportunity to compare foundations to find the best possible match for their programs. Review the list to eliminate those prospects that do not meet your program goals and interests. Focus on the resources most likely to fund your project now or in the future.

Researching organizations takes time. Writing down the information discussed in Steps One and Two, will save you time when it comes to evaluating potential funders and sharing the information with others in your organization to prevent duplication of research efforts. When contacting foundation personnel, be polite and professional. Remember every foundation has a unique personality and culture, and not every one is right for your project.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR GATHERING INFORMATION

• It is important to create a list of the foundations you send applications to that includes when documents are submitted and returned.

• Write down the full name of the foundation personnel you communicate with, including the date of the communication and make notes about the conversation.

• Always provide the requested information on time. Many foundations have dates scheduled in advance for meetings, and if your submission is not received on time, you may lose the opportunity to be considered.

On the following page you will find a comprehensive list of research websites to help you achieve the goals outlined in this section.

Winning the Grant

Writing the proposal

Most foundations supply guidelines on what they want you to include in the proposals submitted to them. If they provide guidelines, they expect that they will be followed. They will appreciate that you have taken the time to give them the information on your project in the format they request.

SEVEN BASIC ELEMENTS MOST FOUNDATIONS EXPECT TO SEE IN A PROPOSAL:

1. Executive Summary – Summarize your request (1 page).
2. Statement of Need or Problem Statement – State the issue or condition, and the causes of the condition in relation to their guidelines/priorities (1-2 pages).
3. Project Description, Goal, and Objective(s) – State the benefits of the project in measurable terms (2-3 pages).
4. Activities – Describe the activities to achieve the objectives (2-3 pages).
5. Staffing and Evaluation Method – Describe how you will determine the success of your project in relation to the accomplishment of the goal (2 pages).
6. Budget – Show the realistic costs to be covered by the grant (1 page).
7. Conclusion – (2 paragraphs).

Executive Summary

The executive summary is the first and most important page of the proposal. It should:

- Clearly state all of the key information
- Show the proposal is a strategic match to the grantmaker's priorities
- Show the proposal is operational

You can include a brief description of the following:

- The Issue your community wants to address through your project
- Explanation of how the project is a match with the grantmaker’s priority funding goals
- The Solution – the work plan that includes project timeline and goals
- Evaluation Plan – explains how effectiveness of your project will be measured
- Future Directions – explains the future plans and pathways for your project
Statement of Need or Problem Statement

Develop the human of the story and build the case for your project. Explain the value of your project to the people who will receive the benefits of the funding. Convince the foundation that your project is important and explain why it is the right match. Tell why no one else has successfully addressed this issue and how you are uniquely placed to deliver the changes.

Describe:

The issue and the evidence of the issue (show that you understand the problem).
Communicate the story of your Indigenous community. Include:

- Who is affected
- Why the problem or issue exists
- What caused the issue or problem
- Scope/ extent of the problem

Create a detailed profile of your Indigenous community. Include:

- Demographic information
- Economic activities
- Political structure
- Socio-economic status and social stratification
- Partner organizations and their functions and activities

Project Description, Goal and Objectives

This part of the proposal should explain how you plan to create a solution to the problem you have defined. It should describe your project. The project description should include the following:

- The goal and objectives
- The activities and project timeline
- The staffing (include staff members and volunteers)
- The evaluation plan

Goal

The goal should be defined in a sentence or paragraph that boldly and clearly delineates what you want to accomplish or change. Example: To improve the economic and social conditions of the Ilngwesi people.

Objectives

The objectives break down the goal into action tasks.

- To organize an advisory committee of five leaders in Ilngwesi Group Ranch, from January to March.
- To drill ten boreholes on the Ilngwesi Group Ranch by September.

Activities and Timelines

The schedule of activities and timeline forms the basis of your project work plan.

- The activities section describes how you will achieve the tasks (objectives).
- Who will achieve the tasks (people).
- The timeline shows when an action or outcome will/has occurred, and also the sequence of the tasks.

Activities and Timeline Example:

In January the Project Coordinator will meet individually with community leaders and request a convening to discuss the development and implementation of ten additional boreholes within our territory. Meetings will be held in January and February. At the meetings leaders will utilize their traditional knowledge through discussion and selection of the appropriate locations to drill the additional ten boreholes, as well as determine the appropriate grazing patterns to incorporate the new water supply locations.

Once the locations of the boreholes have been determined, the Project Coordinator will confer with the local agriculture extension agency and schedule drilling. The agriculture extension agency has volunteered their time, expertise, and equipment to assist in the drilling, which is planned to begin by the end of March to capture the spring rains. By the end of September 2004, we will have drilled 10 additional boreholes within our territory providing additional water supply for our cattle. This will allow a larger herd size resulting in an increase in the economic and social stability of our community.
Staffing

Briefly list the experience and networks the staff and volunteers will bring to the project. In addition, you will want to indicate whether they will be working full or part-time on the project.

Example of Staffing Description:

Jose Ole Karea will be the full-time Project Coordinator. He has six years’ experience organizing community groups within the Massai tribe to address community concerns and issues. In addition, Karea, a member of the Ilngwesi Group Ranch, is well-known and respected within the community. He will be responsible for the implementation of the project, coordinating and conducting the advisory committee meetings, coordinating the borehole drilling operation, and monitoring and reporting on the project progress.

The agricultural extension agency has worked in the Ilngwesi Group Ranch previously on various pastoral projects and brings a wealth of expertise to the project. They will be responsible for the drilling of the boreholes utilizing environmental sound management techniques. Their staff and equipment will be engaged in the project from March through September 2004.

Remember: foundations are reviewing your proposal not only on the content of the project but also on the capacity to carry it out successfully, so choose the right personnel who have credibility in delivering projects.

Evaluation Plan and Quality Management

It is essential that you describe how you intend to evaluate the project and how you will manage the quality of the project. The evaluation process contains two sections:

- Monitoring the planned activities.
- Gathering, analyzing and presenting the information to determine whether the project achieves its goal and objectives.

Evaluation example:

The Project Coordinator will document monthly feedback on the project activities, documenting trends of reported changes and improvements. Progress and final reports will be made available to the community and the funding agency as required.

Quality Management Plan Example:

The organization’s manager and board will regularly monitor timelines and results.
The Results and Outcomes

It is anticipated that through the project implementation, short-term and long-term outcomes will take place.

The following community outcomes will be accomplished:

- Increased community economic independence.
- Increased sustainable farming.
- Increased family income.
- Increased food security by decreased dependency on food delivery programs.

The following personal outcomes will be achieved:

- Increased self-esteem by meaningful employment and shaping one's own community.
- Increased health by food security and gainful employment.

To determine the success of the project in meeting the stated goal, information will be gathered on both the short and long-term community impacts.

The short-term community impact will include an increase in self-esteem of the community members. Information will be gathered on the number of community members involved in the borehole drilling activity and the increased number of cattle with access to the additional water supply and potentially larger herds.

Long-term outcomes will happen within the next year. We will continue to evaluate the project and gather information in the following areas:

- The number of individuals moving out of the community after the implementation of the new boreholes.
- The number of individuals not using outside resources for their food supply.
- The increased numbers and quality of the cattle and the respective increase in income through sales to urban centers.

The successful completion of the project will result in an improved economic and social condition of the Ilngwesi Group Ranch.

Explain the expected project results and how the project will create change as it relates to the issue identified in the background information. This doesn’t have to be exhaustive but detailed enough to set the stage for the project goal and the objectives. Make sure you indicate the project outcomes and how they relate to the project goal.
For example:

The lack of water for cattle has created economic and social strife within our community. To address this situation, we propose to drill ten boreholes within our territory to increase the water supply for our cattle. We will consult with our elders and community leaders on the appropriate locations for the boreholes and solicit assistance from the local agricultural extension program to provide expertise and equipment for the drilling. With the addition of the new boreholes our cattle will have sufficient water for grazing, resulting in a larger herd size.

The successful completion of this project will create an increase in community economic stability, increase family stability, decrease dependency on food programs, and increase tribal members’ self-esteem through a greater self-sufficiency.

Budget

The introduction of the budget section should be brief and indicate any additional resources outside of the requested funding. Make sure you have included all project costs including in-kind donations (volunteer hours), cash contributions, and other grant awards for this specific project. A budget should be competitive and realistic; design the budget to adequately plan for expenses to ensure you can deliver the project successfully.

Conclusion

Each proposal must have one or two conclusion paragraphs. This is a good place to bring attention to what will happen after the completion of the project. If appropriate, you can list future activities. This will prepare the foundation for your next funding request. It is important that you convey that the project will continue whether or not you receive subsequent funding.

Also summarize the proposal’s main points. Briefly restate what the organization wants to accomplish and why it is important. Emphasize why your organization needs funding to reach the stated project goal. Do not be afraid to passionately reaffirm your case.

About Il Ngwesi II Group Ranch

Il Ngwesi II (two) is a Maasai-run and -owned Group Ranch in Laikipia District, Kenya. The group ranch represents a vision of land use that both meets the needs of the communities that live in the area and also provides a large and secure environment for wildlife populations to live and migrate. For more than a decade, Il Ngwesi Group Ranch has been driven by a vision to integrate community development and sustainable environmental management. The core idea is to use the environment as a means to improve the livelihood of the people through eco-friendly activities that conserve wildlife and its habitat, and uphold Maasai culture. The vision led the community to set aside 80% of their land for conservation activities. Our unique eco-lodge was then established within the conservation area. The income from the lodge directly supports several community projects, as well as the conservation budget.
Grant Delivery

- Use the proposal as the core foundation for your work plan.
- Evaluate the roles you need to fill and work to match the skill sets of your staff to the responsibilities they will assume during the project.
- Build in checks and balances to ensure you are achieving deadlines, project goals, and staying within budgetary guidelines.
- Maintain good lines of communications with the grant manager/project coordinator and all of the key staff involved with the project.
- Before the project begins, know how you are going to measure the outcomes and have the evaluation methodology and tools clearly established.

Credibility to Deliver

When creating the proposal, be prepared to explain why you are confident your organization can accomplish the goals you propose for the project. Credibility matters. Here are a few key points to ensure include in your proposals:

- Define the roles and experience of all your key people.
  Your staff/volunteers/community are your assets. Make sure you value them appropriately when defining the experience your project officers, staff, board members and volunteers bring to the project.

- List the other services and projects your organization has successfully completed to leverage your ability to successfully complete a similar project.

- Provide information about your organization’s NGO status, history and achievements.

- Define how the proposed project supports your organization’s mission.

- Be clear and concise regarding the budgetary expectations.
  Budget how much you will need for this project, define all sources of revenue, and explain how the project will be funded in the future.
The Academy for Educational Development’s (AED) democracy-building and civil society development programs around the world have helped citizens monitor and influence government activities, support market reforms, defend minority and women’s rights, ferret out corruption, and protect the environment. In addition to activities that are specifically designed to build democracy, most of programs include a component to strengthen civil society through coalition building, grantmaking, advocacy training, organizational development, or civic education campaigns. For more information about projects in these countries, please contact the foundation via e-mail. AED also has project field offices in 49 countries:

Conservation and Research Foundation (CRF)
Box 5261
Connecticut College
New London, CT 06320
USA
Contact: Dr. Richard H. Goodwin

The Conservation and Research Foundation (CRF) gives priority to unique conservation efforts, which are not funded by more conventional funding agencies. Issues supported include the establishment of reserves, development of open space programs, environmental law, preservation of unique habitats, insect control, and the conduct of ecological surveys leading to better land use patterns. Other issues supported include overpopulation, human reproduction.
Cottonwood Foundation has a very limited amount of funding available, and will only award grants to organizations that meet all four of the following criteria:

• Protect the environment.
• Promote cultural diversity.
• Empower people to meet their basic needs.
• Rely on volunteer efforts.

Cottonwood Foundation especially seeks to support organizations for which small grants will make a significant difference.

Organizations are not required to have 501(c)(3) status, but only charitable, nonprofit organizations will be funded.

Cultural Survival (CS) provides empowerment tools that support Indigenous efforts to effectively resist cultural degradation and threats to their habitat and sovereignty. CS is currently sponsoring projects initiated by Indigenous Peoples who seek to obtain land rights, protect and manage their natural resources, market sustainable products, preserve their language and art forms, etc.

CS also provides organizational and administrative support, and acts as a fiscal sponsor to small, independent initiatives that contribute to Cultural Survival’s mission. Interests include conflict and migration, culture, health, Indigenous enterprise, law and self-determination, and natural resources. The Netherlands Centre for Indigenous Peoples (NCIV) provides grants for the Rights of Indigenous Peoples that focus on the United Nations Draft Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. Grants for Rights of Indigenous Peoples, which address one or more of the following rights: right to peace, right to culture, right to consultation, land and resource rights, intellectual property rights, Indigenous women’s rights, and protection of Indigenous knowledge.

The Human Rights Fund for Indigenous Peoples’ main objective is to enable the participation of representatives of Indigenous Peoples to attend relevant United Nations human rights functions, such as the Working Group on Indigenous Peoples established in accordance with Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/32 and the Commission on Human Rights. This fund was established in 1984 and is now administered together with Anti Slavery International (England), the Gesellschaft fur Bedrohte Volker (Germany), the International Work Group for Indigenous Affairs (Denmark), and KWIA (the Belgian Indigenous support group).

The Visitors Fund, financed by Dutch Committee of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature, is to enable NGO representatives who are already visiting in Europe to also visit the Netherlands if this is relevant to their situation. Since 1998 NCIV administers this fund in cooperation with Environmental Data Service, the European environmental news source, and Friends of the Earth.

Climate Change, Indigenous Peoples, and the Way Forward

The Scientific Case for Indigenous Knowledge

The most recent assessment from the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change describes strategies of pre-Colombian peoples in the Americas to adapt to local climate changes more than two thousand years ago. It notes, “Today, under the vagaries of weather and climate, exacerbated by the increasing greenhouse effect and the rapid retreat of the glaciers, it would be extremely useful to revisit and update such adaptation measures. Education and training of present community members on the knowledge and technical abilities of their ancestors would be the way forward.”

While many industrialized societies have the lost transmission of ancestral knowledge from generation to generation, more than 300 million Indigenous peoples across the globe have not. They have distilled what author Wendell Berry called a “highly evolved awareness” of climate change.

That the international scientific body established to document the ‘current state of climate change,’ included Indigenous knowledge is a sign of the times. Emerging from under the evidence of melting glaciers and rapid extinction are voices sounding the way forward. In the chapter, “Indigenous knowledge for adaptation to climate change,” the IPCC wrote: “There is an increasing awareness of the value of Arctic indigenous knowledge and a growing collaborative effort to document it. In addition, this knowledge is an invaluable basis for developing adaptation and natural resource management strategies in response to environmental and other forms of change.”

A Brief History of Climate Change Policy

For the past forty years or so – at least since 1968 when the United Nations Economic and Social Council decided to hold the first UN Conference on the Human Environment – the international community has attempted to find such strategies, largely without any input from Indigenous peoples. Held in 1972, the first “Earth Summit” raised the issue of climate change for the first time on the global stage. Over the next twenty years, international efforts painstakingly built consensus around climate change, including the creation of the IPCC in 1988. Such momentum was reached by 1992 that the second Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro inaugurated the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) to stabilize green house gases. The “Rio Summit” also opened the UN Convention on Biological Diversity, the only climate change-related convention to consider Indigenous participation beyond ‘observers.’ Five years later negotiations produced the Kyoto Protocol to the UNFCCC, the cornerstone of a global strategy.

Current Issues

As the end of the first commitment period of the Protocol looms in 2012, a new framework, or extension, needs to be ratified to avert the dramatic climate changes calculated by the IPCC. Its latest report identified regions most at risk, including the Arctic, Africa, small islands and the ‘megadeltas’ in Africa and Asia -- places with high concentrations of Indigenous peoples. Despite
This official exclusion has not deterred their attempts to be heard. The sixth session of the UN Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues appointed special rapporteurs (a person appointed by a committee to prepare reports of meetings or carry out an investigation) to investigate the impact of climate change mitigation on Indigenous peoples. In 2008, the Forum’s Seventh Session specifically addressed “Climate Change, Bio-cultural Diversity and Livelihoods: the Stewardship Role of Indigenous Peoples and New Challenges.” In April, the largest Indigenous Peoples Summit on Climate Change resulted in a detailed call-to-action, known as the Anchorage Declaration, that included a demand for binding emissions targets of 45% below 1990 levels by 2020 and at least 95% by 2050 for developed countries.

Indigenous Culture as Best Practice

Since the IPCC identified deforestation as a significant source of climate change, forest peoples have a significant stake in negotiations around the deforestation agenda item first introduced at the Conference of the Parties to the UNFCC in 2005. The collaborative UN program created to provide incentives for sustainable forest management, known as UN-REDD, is one of the most obvious venues for Indigenous input but also very controversial. In light of the IPCC’s recommendation to base resource management strategies on Indigenous knowledge, the UN-REDD could recognize their traditional livelihoods and management systems as mitigation measures to be officially rewarded and institutionalized. However, it can possibly become the biggest land grab in history of remaining Indigenous territories.

Recommendations for Donors

It is imperative that climate diplomacy no longer exclude the peoples least responsible yet most affected by climate change. Just as the scientific community incorporated Indigenous peoples’ experience into its findings, negotiators should formally invite their representatives to the table.

Terms:

IPCC (The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change) – the scientific body created by UNEP, (the United Nations Environment Programme) and the WMO, (World Meteorological Organization) to assess the current state of climate change and its potential environmental and socio-economic consequences.

Kyoto Protocol – an international agreement linked to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change. Its primary objective was to lower overall emissions from six greenhouse gases from 2008 to 2012, when it expires.

UNFCC (The United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change) – the parent body overseeing the Kyoto Protocol, it addresses such issues as forest functions, carbon sequestration, reforestation, deforestation and carbon trading.

UN-REDD (The United Nations Collaborative Program on Reducing Emissions from Deforestation
